

Guide to Administration of Trusts

What are the duties of a Trustee?

The Trustees are under a duty to deal with the assets in the best interests of the Beneficiaries and, if they fail in this duty, they will be in breach of Trust. The Beneficiaries can ask the Court to make sure that the terms of the Trust are carried out. The duties of a Trustee are set out in legislation but can be altered or added to. Trustees must understand the terms of the Trust and act in the best interests of the Beneficiaries and not for their own benefit.

In order to carry out their duties, the Trustees have a range of powers that are defined by law or set out in the Trust Deed. General powers will cover matters such as investment, dealing with land, delegation to agents or nominees, insurance and remuneration of a professional Trustee. The Trust Deed may include additional powers relating to advancement of capital, appropriation of assets, maintenance for Beneficiaries (usually in the case of minors), appointment of Trust assets and lending funds.

What records does a Trustee have to keep?

It is essential that full records are kept by the Trustees. It is necessary to keep proper records of all Trust assets and financial transactions. In particular, bank statements for Trust bank accounts and detailed statements for Trust investments. Records of interest received, expenses incurred and other information required for tax reporting purposes will also be necessary. The Trustees must record the decisions they make, including explanations of any payments made from the Trust's assets. It is advisable for Trustees to routinely hold meetings at least annually to consider the Trust's assets and the needs of the Beneficiaries. Minutes should be taken of these meetings.

How can Renaissance Legal help?

Fulfilling the role of a Trustee can be complex and it can be difficult for Trustees to understand what is required of them in order to manage a Trust on a day to day basis. Many Trustees find it useful to seek professional advice to help them fulfil their roles. We can help with this advising, as necessary, on the nature and extent of your powers and duties as a Trustee. We can also deal with the ongoing administration of the Trust by preparing annual accounts and tax returns, completing Inheritance Tax returns, advising Trustees on distributions from the Trust and any tax consequences, agreeing a suitable investment policy with investment advisers and monitoring investment performance. In addition, our sister company Renaissance Trust can relieve the burden by acting as a professional Trustee alone or with you.
